Kevin Creeden has over 30 years of clinical experience treating children, adolescents, adults and families working extensively with sexually and physically aggressive youth. Over the past 20 years, his primary focus has been on issues of trauma and attachment difficulties, especially with regard to the neurological impact of trauma on behavior and he has authored several articles and book chapters on the neuro-developmental impact of trauma on sexual behavior problems. Presently, he is a guest faculty at the Simmons School of Social Work advanced training program in Trauma-Focused treatment. Mr. Creeden trains and consults both nationally and internationally to youth service, community, forensic services and mental health service agencies.

Conference Objectives

Counselors will...

- Increase their understanding of how trauma and attachment disruptions can impact a wide range of developmental skills
- Learn about a treatment approach that utilizes neuro-developmental research to guide treatment interventions and the sequencing of those interventions.
- Explore different interventions that can be used individually and in the classroom that promote safety, learning, and developmental progress.
